STATE LAWS VARY

SN lawyers are licensed to practice law only within the states of New York and Florida but we form relationships with lawyers throughout the United States. SN may refer prospective clients to other law firms located throughout the country, who are experienced in handling such cases. SN may also undertake legal representation in certain cases, and will affiliate with other legal counsel located throughout the country to provide legal representation.

The laws of each State are different. This web site contains information about general or common rules that apply in some states. This web site also contains information about verdicts or settlements in past cases. You cannot assume that the same rules apply, or that the same result would occur, in your state or any particular state.

Every state has a “statute of limitations” which set a time limit to file a lawsuit. A lawsuit filed after the time limit has expired may be thrown out, regardless of the defendant’s fault or the severity of the injuries. Some states have a two-year period for negligence injury claims; the time period in other states may be longer or shorter. Insurance policies, particularly homeowners insurance, may require that suit be filed within one year of a loss. Some states allow claims against government agencies, but require a written notice very soon after the accident, perhaps within three months. Because investigation and research is needed to identify all possible defendants and theories of recovery, if you have an accident or injury, you should consult a lawyer as soon as possible.

LEGAL AND ETHICAL REQUIREMENTS

We welcome comments about our compliance with the applicable rules and will update the site as warranted, upon learning of any new or different requirements.
